The oil mill is running full time and will continue until about March 1st. The season has been an exceedingly prosperous one.

Through the courtesy of Mrs. M. E. Wolters and Contractor Henry Schurbohm, Monday, the writer was shown through the magnificent residence just completed by Mr. Schurbohm, or Mr. Wolters. In the erection of the building, three things seem to have been in contemplation; comfort, convenience and beauty of design and finish. The building was painted by August Martens. The colors used on the outside being white, light pink, with the offsets dark red, and the blinds and porches a pale green. The blending of the colors makes a very pleasing effect. There are eight rooms; four up stairs and four down stairs, besides bath room, pantry and closets. The rooms up stairs are furnished for bed rooms. The wall paper is of light colors. The first room down stairs to the left from the front is the parlor. The workmen were putting the finishing touches on it Monday. One of the features of this room is the arch over the bay window, something quite novel. The reception room is first to the right on entering; the dining room just behind, being connected with both Seydler & Eschenburg.

The writer called on Joe F. Kopecky Tuesday, and found him much improved. He had been sitting up for some time when the writer called. The weights were taken from his limbs some ten days ago and he is now able to walk across the room with the aid of crutches. He was in excellent spirits at the prospects of soon being able to come down town. Although the right hip and both limbs were broken, the bones seem to have knitted nicely.

Will Mewes killed 52 quail last Sunday morning. We live in hopes that he will come around and whack up with us the next time he makes a haul like that.

The grip has taken a fresh start here, apparently, and we hear a great many complaints. The disease is characterized by a hard dry cough and fever for several days.

There is talk of another jeweler coming here.

Joe Kopecky is much improved.
